Kristen Renn is Professor of Higher, Adult, and Lifelong Education at Michigan State University. With a background in student affairs administration, including inaugurating the role of LGBTQ resource provided at Brown University, she has for the last 20 years focused her research on the identities, experiences, and development of minoritized students in higher education. Through her work on mixed race college students, leaders in identity-based student organizations, women’s colleges and universities around the world, and LGBTQ college student success, she has contributed to the growing literature on minoritized students in higher education. With Dr. Michael Woodford (Laurier University) she is co-PI of the National Study of LGBTQ Student Success, a two-phase study of LGBTQ college students comprising a mixed methods survey/interview phase conducted with participants in the 2013 MBGLTACC conference and an ongoing longitudinal interview study conducted with LGBTQ students who entered one university in fall 2013.
